In this technological age, media and the Internet are becoming the battlefields for modern conflicts and are the key sources in capturing a global audience. This work focuses on the core of the ongoing struggle for strategic influence and how states can counter the role that media and the Internet play in radicalizing new agents of terrorism. An international group of authors describe how terrorists, insurgents, and nation states compete for strategic influence. The book also provides a set of case studies that illustrate how the means and methods of strategic influence can impact a nation's security.
