More than HALF-A-MILLION Life-Size books have been sold--and kids are sure to go buggy over this new and super-sized vision of the insect world Bugs: they're the most successful animal group on earth and--in most cases--by far the ugliest. But that's what makes them so compelling to look at. In this new spin on the best-selling "Life-Size" series, the teeming bug kingdom comes into view, bigger than ever and enlarged to staggering proportions. That's because the book is packed with highly detailed electron microscope photographs, along with occasional real-size insect images beside them to give readers a true sense of scale. Children will get an amazing and up-close perspective on such creatures as the voraciously hungry caterpillar; the vividly colored Calleta Silkmoth, with blue-and-black spikes covering its body; a Swallowtail Butterfly emerging from its chrysalis; a bright orange Queen Hornet; and a deathly praying mantis, with its luminescent wings and killer pincers. Everything a kid loves is here: crushing mandibles, quivering antennae, hairy hooked legs, and intricate compound eyes. Plus, the back jacket turns into a 42 x 14 inch poster You'll feel as if you're getting a privileged glimpse into an entirely different universe, and the scientific information accompanying the spectacular images is equally phenomenal.
