Even though the subject is serious, the book is written in a conversational and humorous style. This is the book a friend needs when a friend is going through cancer. What people don't realize is that there are numerous ways they can help - they don't have to do it all. They can do the food shopping. They can pick up the kids from school on chemo days. They can sit in the room during the MRI. They can mail the bills. Sometimes the right thing is not giving others the play-by-play of the treatment, or not avoiding the friend, or not always talking about the other people you know with cancer.
