In the 10-20 years, there has been revolutionary change in cosmetic dermatology, which is the treatment of non-malignant skin disorders. Once the province of the surgeon and applicable only to patients who had the resources to undergo invasive surgeries for these problems, it has now become a part of every day dermatology practice available to a much wider range of patients. This has occurred because of new less-invasive surgical techniques (micro-surgery, lasers, photo-dynamic therapy, etc.) as well as the development of new topical treatments (cosmeceuticals and prescription drugs) with relatively few side-effects.

As the cost of these procedures (in time and money) has come down and the applicability of them has increased through new technologies, so has the patient pool increased and broadened. Cosmetic dermatology is now a part of almost every practice and is done throughout all regions of the world. The percentage of non-white patients who have cosmetic procedures is rising, and so is the need for dermatologists to know how to adapt these procedures and treatments to skin of color.

This book will help physicians provide the optimal treatment for darker-skinned cosmetic patients. Efficacy will be improved, treatment time decreased, and avoidable side effects reduced. This book will also help experienced cosmetic dermatologists expand their skin of color practice, and it will help novices at cosmetic dermatology get started. Physicians who are able to cater to darker-skinned patients' special cosmetic dermatology needs will see their practices grow. There are few practicing dermatologists who do not see many patients with darker skin types.
