The embossed line running through this picture book turns itself into all kinds of things: the waves above an octopus, the veins in a leaf, the wrappings curling around a mummy, and the trapping lines of a spider web. Catchy rhyming text is brought to life by a host of creepy critters.

"A raised, glittering, blue line leads enticingly from the cover across the endpages showing the many things that lines can do on all the pages inside and ending as a bowl of noodles on the back. In rhymed couplets we learn of lines that not only wiggle and bend but are wavy "from end to end." They tickle, they sprout, they trap and hide. The busy
