Pornography was once an acceptable element of the Wilson marriage, but a particular incident stretches Germani's comfort zone to the limit. When she reevaluates her Christian beliefs and decides to make a change, Germani quickly learns that her husband, Scott, doesn't agree with her decision. Germani's request that her husband sacrifice his longtime activities falls on deaf ears.

Germani and Scott discover the magnitude of their differences as their lives become tainted. Frustration and judgment test their love for each other. A strain on their relationship develops as they battle over individual ideals and seek advice from every source, except the one that matters most. Ultimately, it will take a great influence from God if their marriage is to be saved.
