Presenting incisive original readings of French writing about the Caribbean from the inception of colonization in the 1640s until the onset of the Haitian Revolution in the 1790s, Doris Garraway sheds new light on a significant chapter in French colonial history. At the same time, she makes a path-breaking contribution to the study of the cultural contact, creolization, and social transformation that resulted in one of the most profitable yet brutal slaves societies in history. Garraway's readings highlight how French colonial writers characterized the Caribbean as a space of spiritual, social, and moral depravity. While tracing this critique in colonial accounts of Island Carib cultures, piracy, spirit beliefs, slavery, miscegenation, and incest, Garraway develops a theory of 'the libertine colony'. She argues that desire and sexuality were fundamental to practices of domination, laws of exclusion, and constructions of race in the slave societies of the colonial French Caribbean. Among the texts Garraway analyzes are missionary histories by Jean-Baptiste Du Terte, Raymond Breton, and Jean-Baptist Labat; narratives of adventure and transgression written by pirates and others outside the official civil and religious power structure; travel accounts; treatises on slavery and colonial administration in Saint-Domingue; the first colonial novel written in French; and the earliest linguistic description of the native Carib language. Garraway also analyzes legislation - including the Code noir - that codified slavery and other racialized power relations. "The Libertine Colony" is both a rich cultural history of creolization as revealed in Francophone colonial literature and an important intervention into theoretical arguments about how literary critics and historians should approach colonial discourse and cultural representations of slave societies.
