This book is suitable for ages four to eight years. "The Great, Great, Great Chicken War" is a richly drawn tale of conflict begun by those who are too afraid, or chicken, to address why they are fighting in the first place. Fully illustrated by David de la Garza when he was five years old and water coloured by his mother, Joyce Rosner, "The Great, Great, Great Chicken War" presents a child's interpretation of how silly people can be when they fight. The book is designed to help parents begin a conversation about conflict with their children. A portion of the book's profits will be donated to a charity for children who are victims of war or disaster.
