It is 1993, summertime in Philadelphia. The Phillies are marching to the playoffs and an ordinary law-abiding citizen is marching into madness, terrorizing the city with his explosive, vengeful wrath. Hot on the case is Lieutenant Matt Gallagher. Celibate since his wife died, Matt is also the center of a large ongoing wager among friends and colleagues as to when he will end his self-imposed fast. Gallagher chases the bomber. Women chase Gallagher. The Phillies chase a pennant. Murder, mayhem, and madness in the City of Brotherly Love. ABOUT THE AUTHOR Matthew J Duffin is 54-years-old and lives in upstate New York. He's a veteran of ten years service in the US Army where his duties included serving as a Fire Direction Specialist, an RTO (radio-telephone operator) and a chief computer operator for a battery of 155mm self-propelled howitzers. He also performed duties as a Platoon Sergeant (several times) and a shift supervisor for a satellite communications facility. The author has also been a machine operator, a baker's helper, a roofer's helper, a warehouseman and has worked on several production lines. He's made, sold and delivered patio furniture, flipped burgers, and collected debts. Oh yes, he was born and raised in Philadelphia (there's only one).
