At age 43, Cleo Hutton awoke to a frightening and completely unfamiliar world. In the prime of life, she experienced a devastating stroke. Suddenly unable to speak, understand or even walk, Hutton found herself struggling first to survive and then to regain her physical skills and her independence. "Striking Back at Stroke" is Hutton's personal journey of this trying time, detailing her hard-won success rebuilding a life in ruins and overcoming difficulties she never imagined confronting. Using a tape-recorder and a notebook by her bedside where family, friends and hospital staff could write messages, Hutton kept a record of the day-to-day emotional, physical and financial trauma of her condition. Hutton's account of her experiences is interwoven with medical and scientific commentary by Louis Caplan, MD, who explains Hutton's case in terms of what scientists and doctors have come to know about strokes. He documents in a clear, concise manner what actually happens before, during and after a stroke - as Hutton in turn lives and documents her experience. Caplan also focuses his observations on how the medical system served her, as well as on the shattering effects a stroke can have on the families of patients. Both authors give valuable advice - about home care, emotional support and physical recovery - from the frontlines of the battle against stroke. These two wise and experienced voices make "Striking Back at Stroke" a wrenching and inspiring personal story as well as a useful guide for anyone enduring the cataclysmic changes that a stroke can bring to a life, a family and a sense of self.
