This collection is an array of stories ranging in topics from a child experiencing the effects of their parent's alcoholism to the differences that often render sibling relationships estranged to visitations from spirits. The author invites readers to experience the life of nine year old Camille, who struggles with a weight problem and dive into a conversation at a luncheon with five women who identify themselves by the kind of anti-depressant pills they're prescribed. "As Celexa would say, it's time to stop being "numb" and really start to deal with life." And these stories do just that...deal with the many issues of life.
