Josefa, whose brilliant and advanced socio-political ideas and genuine interest in working for her people, have fueled her to go into a fierce battle against her nation's evils, becomes the first Mexican woman to run for president. Her father, Silverio Cortines, your typical under-achieving member of the Mexican political system, is set on climbing to the highest steps of the government pyramid, regardless of the means. Father and daughter collide in a world that has been historically considered as an all-male arena.
