In the period between the mid-nineteenth century and the outbreak of the First World War, much of what is now called the Middle East, most of North Africa, and much of Central Asia, came under different forms of colonial rule. In the aftermath of the First World War, a new form of colonialism - ultimately of state creation, came into being. For some time, the practice of colonialism, its various different manifestations in different parts of the world, independence, nationalist and anti-colonial movements, the process of decolonisation and the 'colonial legacy' have been topics of keen academic interest and inquiry, this collection covers the best of this material on colonialism, and nationalism, in the Middle East and North Africa, and will be of interest to students of the history of the Middle East in the 19th and 20th centuries.
