In this extended answer to the question, "Can one's consciousness survive after one dies?"-asked by philosopher Thomas Reid in 1775 and Joe King, a disabled country singer, in 2003-Humphrey concedes he is working to "develop a concept of consciousness which we, as theorists, can do business with." He argues perception is neither solely nor necessarily a product of sensation, and, in fact, the two may exist independently of one another. Humphrey simplifies these intellectually rigorous discussions by returning to a central example of a person staring at a red screen. (Thus creating a "red sensation.") Humphrey's conversational prose-the book is based on his lectures-is an odd fit for the scholarly material, but his approach makes his 30 years of experience in "consciousness studies" accessible to casual readers.

现象学与认知科学，哲学终极命题与最日常生活体验，精彩的论证及实验论据，简直是跨越文理科界线的盛宴！太爱了！神经科学部分很难懂要有基础，如果懂现象学最后两章简直是精彩到爆

读一遍很痛苦，读两遍略了解，读第三遍再结合Cognitive终于让我慢慢理解了...虽然..书很薄..但是好搞脑子！
