Courtney Farrow is a woman other women despise. She will steal your lover or husband, leave you crying, and wash her hands in your tears. Her special victim is Betsy Ross. Ever since Courtney bought life insurance from Betsy and insinuated herself into Betsys circle of friends, Courtney has used all her charms to seduce every guy in Betsys life. So when Courtney turns up deader than a cooked Brussels sprout in a neighbors garage, after an ugly confrontation with Betsy at a party, more than a few fingers point to Betsy as the murderess. So begins Betsys life as an amateur sleuth in A Clause for Murder, where in order to save herself from being the prime suspect, Betsy must discover who killed Courtney Farrow, a woman too many men loved and too many women despised a woman who made men and women pay for her favors.
