The mutilated body of a young white girl is found in the parking lot of an abandoned factory on the Blackfeet Indian reservation in Montana. Raymond Two Teeth, a Blackfeet Tribal Police officer, is joined in his investigation of the crime by Will Perkins, a Lakota federal agent posted in Browning. In spite of the stormy relationship between the tribal cop and the FBI man, they are an effective team. Their investigation leads them to White Calf, a sadistic murderer, and to Dirk Aalford, a hay farmer and polygamist preacher known as 'the prophet.' Both are part of a major methamphetamine distribution operation. Pursued by the FBI and Tribal Police, White Calf heads for the Canadian border, ruthlessly killing anyone who gets in his way. Raymond and Perkins find their own lives in jeopardy as they attempt to bring White Calf and Aalford to justice. Leonard Schonberg's four previous novels, "Deadly Indian Summer," "Fish Heads," "Legacy," and "Morgen's War," were all published by Sunstone Press. "Blackfeet Eyes" is the first novel of a trilogy set on Montana's Blackfeet Indian Reservation.
